This presentation discusses textbook use, and more specifically the integration of open educational resources for instructors in higher education. Faculty participants will share their work with their follow colleagues and discuss specific courses needing OER materials. Dr. Whaley will present useful ways to enhance faculty courses in many academic disciplines while saving students costly expenses in purchasing a textbook for a class and help overcome the economic hardship brought on by limited financial access to quality coursebooks. This presentation includes: copyright rules, repositories for finding currently curated content, selecting materials, vetting content, including mashups, and free publishing resources.
